INVITATION TO THE HOLY LAND

A letter from our Tours Chairman

Announcing Holy Land Tours of Understanding, 1971

Dear Friends:

July, 1971

Because of the great response to the recent travel issue of The Link, and believing that a specially planned tour to the Holy Land may be of interest to church folk and others, Americans for Middle East Understanding, Inc., is planning and sponsoring Holy Land Tours of Understanding, leaving New York on

September 20, 1971
October 11, 1971
November 15, 1971
December 13, 1971 (Christmas pilgrimage)

in the hope that the particular things we have been able to arrange may be of help to you.

First of all, of course, there are the rich experiences of a spiritual pilgrimage to Jerusalem and Bethlehem and Nazareth, with the further enrichment of days in Rome, Athens, Cyprus and Beirut. But there are two additional special features of the tour which we think would be of interest to you: The first is the plan to have our people from here meet with church people from there, individuals and families, Palestinian, Jordanian and Lebanese, and to have opportunities to chat and get acquainted.

The second is the arrangement to meet with leaders of Christian Eastern Orthodoxy, to attend worship services in the ancient churches of the East, and thus to take advantage of the unusual opportunities for ecumenical understanding which are characteristic of both Jerusalem and Beirut. Such special meetings, however, will be limited, in order not to restrict the opportunities for visiting the holy places and the historic sites.

Each of the four tours will be led by a tour director with personal knowledge and experience both in Middle East affairs and in biblical history. The attached article by Dr. Frank Epp, Toward Greater Holiness in Holy Land Travel, suggests the kind of thing we are wanting to do. Sensitivity and openness to what is going on are prerequisites to travel in the Holy Land today.

For 1972 we expect to announce further Holy Land Tours of Understanding. If you are interested in our plan, either for now or for the future, please fill in the coupon atop p. 4 and send the information in to us.

Sincerely,

Harry G. Dorman, Jr.
TOWARD GREATER HOLINESS IN HOLY LAND TRAVEL

By Frank H. Epp

International tourism has become the largest single factor in world trade—over 100 million travelers spending over $20 billion a year. The International Union of Official Travel Organizations is optimistic that this massive global travel will generate, in addition to business, a spirit of international good will.

At least a part of tourism’s hope for forging a more united community of man would lie in the creation of a World Tourism Organization (WTO), which would be related to the United Nations as an agency committed to the building of bridges via travel. WTO is a commendable idea. International commuting should lead to international community!

A “Christian Plus”

Some church denominations have established their own agencies to give travelers “a Christian plus”.

The ethics and values of international travel for Christians have, however, rarely been adequately examined, and nowhere is this truer than with respect to travel to the land of the Bible. Indeed, the assumptions surrounding Holy Land travel have often left travelers uncritical and unguarded, hence easily subject to many abuses.

The pulling of the wool over people’s eyes in the routine promotions, which now bring nearly 500,000 tourists to Jerusalem annually, has become quite serious. Most travelers are not sufficiently aware of the extent to which the promoters are eager to harvest political hay and squeeze commercial advantage from every Holy Land pilgrimage.

The pastors of North America, anxious to make the trip, but unable to afford it, and sometimes eager to supplement meager incomes, have shown themselves particularly gullible, and their followers with them.

One wholesaler of tours, for instance, advises ministers how they can earn their own trip and receive additional cash—$4,000 to be exact—by recruiting 40 paying passengers for a tour. The many advertisements in the religious press suggest the effectiveness of these schemes.

Ministers might and should be paid for their time as well as their ticket if they host a good tour. But when the publicity reads that “your tour members are in no way paying for your trip” you suspect that there may be some hanky-panky. Another brochure projects earnings above trip costs of $9,100 for hosting a 44-person 15-day tour. In other words, the unwary may find themselves misled and exploited.

Getting Full Value

Other examples could be given, though they might cloud the fact that there are many honest promoters and tour conductors. But the first rule for a holy experience in Holy Land travel calls for careful choosing of one’s travel agent and tour host. Especially pious-sounding publicity must be carefully watched.

The tour package too should be closely examined for value related to cost. The packages vary greatly and sorting out the best value in international travel is becoming almost as difficult as selecting the most, the best, and the cheapest from the multiplicity of packages on the grocery shelves.

The economic, religious, and political implications of Holy Land travel should be reviewed also in other ways. Sometimes it seems that the massively commercialized Twentieth Century tourist phenomenon, with its undercurrents of glorification of political and military success, bears resemblance to the Crusades of 1,000 years ago, especially in its overriding disregard for the people of the land, whose home it has been for centuries. Such callousness in Holy Land zealotry must be diligently resisted.

For a true religious experience, travelers should seek out not only ancient rocks and so-called holy places, but also the holy people living there today. It is one thing to worship where Jesus once walked and quite another to follow him where he is or would be walking today—with the poor, down-trodden, discriminated-against masses. No doubt, Jesus’ road to Galilee today would be via the refugee camps in Jordan.

The promoters are anxious to make Holy Land travel a very happy experience, but there is agony in the Holy Land today! No Christian pilgrimage is complete without acquaintance with the grief of the once-persecuted and still-sorrowing Jews from Europe and the oppressed and bitter Arabs in Israel or in the Administered Territories.

Broader Perspectives Needed

Travel to the Holy Land has political dimensions and no Christian tourist does justice to himself, to his Christianity, or to the area without visiting both sides. A Holy Land tour is, therefore, incomplete, if within Israel it avoids close contact with the Arabs and if within the Middle East it does not include at least one Arab country, and preferably more.

Indeed, this tourist-journalist for one cannot any more imagine a true Holy Land experience without a visit to the Palestinian refugee camps in Jordan, Lebanon or Syria, or without a meeting with the Christian leaders of Cairo.

Tourism should benefit the local residents economically, especially if their countries are desperately in need of development. While it isn’t necessary always to pay the prices first asked in the market places, Christian tour-ists should overcome their compulsion to bargain away all the profits for local merchants and their supplies. The craftsmen and women, who provide the most cherished souvenirs, are artists, and they, too, are worthy of their hire.

The economic benefits should flow to the residents also in other ways. Christian tourists should request from their agents that they be housed in domestically-owned hotels and services by local guides. Those luxury packages, which basically benefit only Western investors, should be avoided.

And in conclusion: Travelers should be sensitive to other cultures, other peoples, other values. For the sake of true holiness, they should leave their own provincialities behind, as far behind as possible, when they go to the Holy Land. That, after all, is a major reason for traveling in the Middle East.
